What will I know about health and wellbeing by the end of this topic?

- To understand how a parliamentary debate occurs
- To understand the risks associated with cannabis and volatile substance abuse

In parliament, many topics are debated in the House of Commons and House of Lords.

There is an order to how debates are discussed in parliament. When the debate has ended the Chair asks the question again and a decision is made, which may be through a vote

Solvents are in products that are readily available to buy in many household stores. These include cleaning products like bleach, and aerosol sprays. They can also be found in petrol, glues and gases.

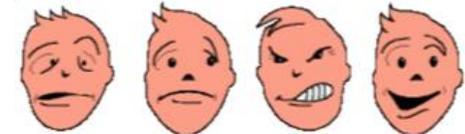

Sniffing these products can lead to dangers to your mind, body and your life. The packaging contains warning logo.

SOLVENT ABUSE CAN KILL INSTANTLY

Some drugs are illegal and the police will be confiscate them from you. You can also be arrested if they are found in your possession.

All drugs are dangerous if they are misused. Someone on drugs can have mood swings and eventually they could end up with physical problems with major organs (brain, lungs and liver).

Illegal drugs such as cannabis, cocaine or heroin are not available to buy in shops.

They affect your mind by causing hallucinations, violent/ aggressive behaviour and poor focus.

Your body can have severe headaches, mouth sores, dizziness and blackouts.

Solvents can kill instantly due to fatal accidents, suffocation, explosions, heart failure and choking on vomit.
